

Anja Weiß (Dr. phil.) is Professor for Sociology with a focus on macrosociology and transnational processes at the Institute for Sociology at the University of Duisburg-Essen. Her theoretical interests in global and transnational inequalities translate into comparative empirical studies on highly skilled migrants, the globalization of professional knowledge, (institutional) racism and legal exclusion, ethnic conflict and anti-racism, and qualitative research design. Her major publications include a country comparative study on high skilled migrants' trajectories into the labor markets in Germany, Turkey and Canada which also focuses on refugees (with Nohl, Schittenhelm and Schmidtke: Work in Transition, Toronto UP 2014) and a sociological perspective on global inequalities (Soziologie Globaler Ungleichheiten, Suhrkamp 2017, English articles: "The transnationalization of social inequality", Current Sociology 53(4) and in Korzeniewicz/ Wallerstein (2018) The World-System as Unit of Analysis. New York). She has offered a Bourdieusian theorization of racism (German book 2013 and: "The racism of globalization" Macedo/ Gounari (eds.). The globalization of racism. Boulder, CL; 2006) and works on transnationally comparative research designs in migration research (in Amelina et al. (2012) Beyond methodological nationalism. London) and the ways in which professional knowledge in the medical field is both context-bound and universal (in Ethnicity & Health 2016 21(4)).

Weiß is co-editor of the German language review journal "Soziologische Revue", and she serves as head of the Diversity Management Commission and on the board of the newly founded Interdisciplinary Centre for Integration and Migration at University of Duisburg-Essen.
